THE LATE EXCLUSIVE ELECTIONS.

The elections for educational officers in Boston and Manchester, England, at which we recently published comments, have since been held, and the results are known. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans ran distinctly Republican tickets; in Manchester, as in Chicago, the Americans ran distinctly Democratic tickets. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans were successful; in Manchester, as in Chicago, they were defeated. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans ran against the regular nominees of the two political parties; in Manchester, as in Chicago, they ran against the regular nominees of the Democratic party. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans were opposed by the Democrats; in Manchester, as in Chicago, they were opposed by the Republicans. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans were opposed by the Democrats because they were Republicans in disguise; in Manchester, as in Chicago, they were opposed by the Republicans because they were Democrats in disguise. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans were opposed by the Democrats because they were Republicans in disguise, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people; in Manchester, as in Chicago, they were opposed by the Republicans because they were Democrats in disguise, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans were opposed by the Democrats because they were Republicans in disguise, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people on a party ticket; in Manchester, as in Chicago, they were opposed by the Republicans because they were Democrats in disguise, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people on a party ticket. In Boston, as in Chicago, the Americans were successful because they were Republicans in disguise, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people on a party ticket, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people on a party ticket, and because they were opposed to the principle of the election of school officers by the people on a party ticket
